The AAP quickly gained popularity in India, particularly in urban areas. In the 2013 Delhi Assembly elections, the AAP won 28 of the 70 seats, becoming the second-largest party in the assembly. Kejriwal was elected as Chief Minister of Delhi, and the AAP formed a government with the support of the Congress party.

The AAP's victory in Delhi was a major upset, and it sent shockwaves through the Indian political establishment. The party's success was attributed to its anti-corruption message and its promise to improve the lives of ordinary Indians.

The AAP's Ideology

The AAP's ideology is based on the principles of Swaraj (self-rule), Swaraj (transparency), and Jan Lokpal (ombudsman). The party believes that power should be decentralized and that ordinary citizens should have a greater say in how their country is run.

The AAP is also committed to fighting corruption and promoting social justice. The party has promised to enact strong anti-corruption laws and to provide basic services to all citizens, regardless of their income or background.

The AAP's ideology has resonated with many Indians, particularly young people and those who are disillusioned with the traditional political parties.

The AAP's Impact on Indian Politics

The AAP's rise has had a significant impact on Indian politics. The party has challenged the dominance of the Congress and BJP parties and has given a voice to ordinary Indians.

The AAP has also forced the traditional parties to adopt more populist policies. The Congress and BJP have both promised to enact anti-corruption laws and to provide basic services to all citizens.

The AAP's success has also inspired other political parties to form. Several new parties have been founded in recent years, all of which are committed to fighting corruption and promoting social justice.

The AAP's impact on Indian politics is still unfolding. However, it is clear that the party has played a major role in changing the political landscape of India.
