The Doig journal begins in 1862, when Alexander Doig arrived in Canada with his wife and children. The journal records the family's struggles to establish a new life on the frontier. Doig writes about the challenges of clearing land, building a house, and raising a family in a harsh and unforgiving environment.

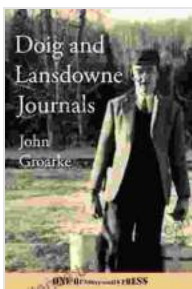

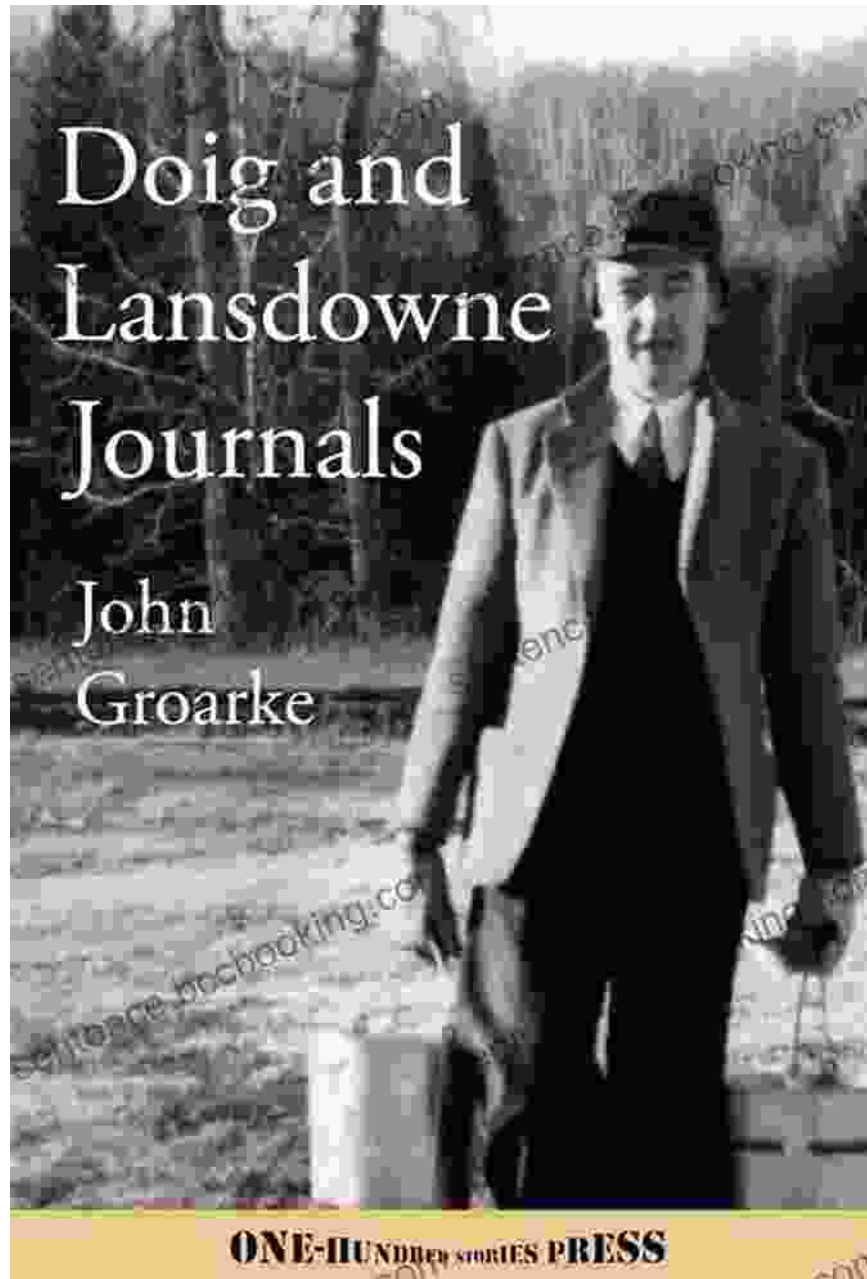

The Lansdowne journal begins in 1874, when Robert Lansdowne arrived in Canada with his wife and children. The Lansdownes settled in the same area as the Gs, and their journal provides a complementary account of pioneer life in the Swan River Valley. Lansdowne writes about the challenges of farming, the joys of family life, and the importance of community.

The G and Lansdowne Journals are a valuable historical resource for anyone interested in the history of the Canadian West. The journals provide a unique glimpse into the lives of two pioneer families, and they offer a rich understanding of the challenges and rewards of life on the frontier.
