Letterboxing with Kids: A Guide to Getting Started

What is Letterboxing?

Letterboxing is a worldwide outdoor activity that involves finding hidden boxes containing a logbook and a rubber stamp. Using a compass and clues provided in a guidebook, you follow a trail to the box and then use the stamp to mark your logbook as proof of your discovery.

Unlike traditional treasure hunts, letterboxing boxes are not meant to be taken. Instead, the focus is on the journey, the discovery, and the connection with nature.

Benefits of Letterboxing With Kids

- Encourages outdoor exploration: Letterboxing gets kids out of the house and into nature, promoting physical activity and appreciation for the environment.
- Fosters problem-solving skills: The clues provided in the guidebook challenge kids to think critically and use their problem-solving abilities.
- Stimulates curiosity and learning: Letterboxing often leads to discovering historical landmarks, natural wonders, and local stories, fostering kids' curiosity and expanding their knowledge.
- Promotes family bonding: Letterboxing is a shared experience that brings families together, creating lasting memories and strengthening bonds.
- Provides educational value: The guidebooks often include information about the area's history, geography, and wildlife, offering educational opportunities for kids.

Getting Started

1. Get a guidebook: The first step is to Free Download a letterboxing guidebook for your area. These books provide the clues and coordinates needed to find the hidden boxes.

- 2. Gather your supplies: You'll need a compass, a pencil, and a small notebook or logbook to record your discoveries. You may also want to bring along a magnifying glass, a flashlight, and snacks.
- 3. Choose a letterbox: Decide which letterbox you want to start with. The guidebook will provide information about the difficulty level and terrain of each box.
- 4. Follow the clues: The clues in the guidebook will lead you to the letterbox. Use your compass and problem-solving skills to navigate the trail.
- 5. Find the box: Once you find the box, open it carefully and sign the logbook with your pencil. Use your rubber stamp to mark the logbook as proof of your discovery.

Tips for Letterboxing With Kids

- Start with easy letterboxes and gradually increase the difficulty as your kids become more experienced.
- Make it a family affair and involve everyone in the clues and navigation.
- Be respectful of the environment and leave the letterbox and its surroundings undisturbed.
- Take your time and enjoy the journey. The discovery is just as important as finding the box.
- If you get stuck, don't hesitate to seek help from other letterboxers or online forums.

 Share your discoveries with others by creating your own letterboxes and hiding them for others to find.
