"Herstories Northwest Women Upholding Native Traditions" is a deeply resonant collection of interviews, memoirs, and cultural insights that sheds light on the invaluable contributions of these often-overlooked heroines.

Chapter 1: The Wisdom Keepers

Begin your exploration with the wisdom keepers, who have safeguarded ancient knowledge and cultural practices through generations. Meet renowned elders like Lillian Pitt of the Nisqually tribe, whose unwavering stewardship has ensured the continuity of traditional basket weaving. Discover the profound teachings of Bertha George of the Snunéymuxw First Nation, who has dedicated her life to revitalizing the Hul'q'umi'num language. These wise women embody the living legacy of their ancestors, passing on invaluable cultural treasures that would otherwise be lost to time.

Chapter 2: The Healers

Journey into the realm of traditional healing practices and encounter women who have dedicated their lives to promoting wellness and harmony within their communities. Learn about the remarkable work of Jeanine Littlebear, a Coast Salish midwife and healer, who has empowered countless women through her unwavering support and holistic approach. Embrace the ancient wisdom of women like Anita Charles of the Hoh tribe, whose deep understanding of medicinal herbs has fostered healing and resilience in her community for decades.

Chapter 3: The Artists

Celebrate the vibrant artistic expressions that have emerged from the hands of Northwest Native women. From the intricate beadwork of Mavis Harris of the Stó:lō First Nation to the breathtaking jewelry designs of Miranda Belarde of the Salish Kootenai Nation, these artists are not only preserving cultural traditions but also creating stunning works that reflect their unique perspectives and experiences. Immerse yourself in the artistry of women like Laura Morton of the Tsimshian tribe, whose paintings capture the essence of her ancestors' stories and the beauty of her homeland.

Chapter 4: The Activists

Witness the unwavering determination of Northwest Native women who have fought tirelessly for the rights of their people and the protection of their ancestral lands. Follow the courageous journey of Rachel Dolezal of the Couer d'Alene tribe, who has dedicated her life to advocating for environmental justice and cultural preservation. Learn about the inspiring work of Amanda Tilley of the Squaxin Island Tribe, whose unwavering leadership has played a pivotal role in promoting tribal sovereignty and self-determination.

Chapter 5: The Educators

Discover the invaluable role of Northwest Native women in promoting cultural education and ensuring the preservation of traditional knowledge. Meet educators like Dr. Shannon Speed of the Duwamish tribe, whose groundbreaking research has shed light on the resilience and strength of her ancestors. Celebrate the work of women like Colleen Echohawk of the Yakama Nation, whose passion for teaching has inspired countless young people to embrace their cultural heritage and become future leaders.
