The History of Woodstock

The idea for Woodstock was conceived by four young men: Michael Lang, Artie Kornfeld, Joel Rosenman, and John Roberts. They were all involved in the music business, and they wanted to create a festival that would be unlike anything that had been done before. The festival was originally planned to be held in Walkill, New York, but the town's residents voted against it. The organizers then moved the festival to Bethel, New York, where they were able to secure a permit.

The festival was held over three days, from August 15 to 18, 1969. The lineup included some of the biggest names in music, including Jimi Hendrix, Janis Joplin, The Who, and Santana. The festival was a huge success, and it attracted over 400,000 people. However, the event was not without its problems. The festival was plagued by rain, and there were several drug overdoses. The festival also had a significant impact on the environment, and it took several years for the site to be cleaned up.
